

Kappa (working title)

Marius Swane Wishman¹

¹*Department of Sociology and Political Science, NTNU*

14th March 2022

Abstract

Keywords—

1 Introduction

In North West Indonesia 1976, GAM (Gerkan Aceh Merdeka: Free Aceh Movement) declared independence for the province of Aceh, under the leadership of Hasan di Tiro, a descendent of the last Sultan of the Aceh region. Initially the movement consisted of the remnants of an old religious network, with its roots in the old Sultanate and armed struggle against the Dutch. The resulting conflict lasted until 2005 and resulted in an estimated 3402 combat related fatalities after 1989 (Aspinall 2009, Pettersson & Eck 2018, Sundberg & Melander 2013).

In Ethiopia 1975, the Dirge regime tried to arrest the Sultan of Aussa. However, anticipating the move, the Sultan's son had already sent men to neighboring Somalia to train in guerilla warfare (Shehim 1985). The Sultan evaded arrest and launched the Afar Liberation Front (ALF) organized around the men trained in Somalia. The heavy handed response of the Ethiopian military left over a thousand civilian casualties (<https://ucdp.uu.se/conflict/363>).

In 1960, in the newly formed Republic of the Congo (Léopoldville) (current Democratic Republic of the Congo) South Kasai declares unilaterally to have seceded from the nascent Republic under the leadership of traditional chief Albert Kalonji (Nzongola-Ntalaja 2002). He then preceded to have his father declared the new Mulopwe, thus resurrecting the royal title of the Luba kingdom (1585-1889). His father promptly abdicated handing the title to Kalonji (now styling himself Albert Ditunga, 'homeland'). South Kasai fought for independence for just over two years, provoking a campaign by the Congolese armed forces that at the time was characterized by UN Secretary-General Dag Hammarskjöld as an act of genocide (Nzongola-Ntalaja 2002).

Why is this problem worth addressing?

How does it relate to other work? Puzzles etc in the literature.

What the three preceding narratives have in common is that in both the media and the academic peace-and-conflict literature, they have been cast almost exclusively as ethnic conflicts. While all of them do have important ethnic components as well, they clearly demonstrate a link to past states. While there is a growing literature on the economic consequences of state histories, only a handful of studies have examined the link between past statehood and organized violence. However, the findings in this emerging literature have been conflicting so far. While some, in line with the examples given above, find a conflict inducing effect of past states (Englebert et al. 2002, Paine 2019), others argue that past experience of statehood provides experience and institutions that are peace inducing (Wig 2016, Wig & Kromrey 2018, Depetris-Chauvin 2016). Additionally, this literature has been almost exclusively focused on Africa. Thus there are open questions as to whether there is a positive or negative association between state histories and organized violence, or if both statements are true, but vary according to circumstances. In case of the latter, what determines the instances when and where past statehood is conflict inducing or peace inducing.

What do I do to address the problem/puzzle?

How is organized violence shaped by the underlying topography of historical statehood? This thesis seeks to answering this overarching research question, adding to our general understanding of organized violence. While increasing the general understanding of key concepts is a goal in itself for any academic discipline, this understanding will hopefully contribute to the vital goals of conflict prevention and de-escalation, however small and indirect this contribution may be.

I address this research question across four individual articles and contribute to the literature through substantial data collection[?], and novel theory building, which breaks new ground on a so far “under-researched” part of the larger peace- and conflict research. The thesis has contributed to two data projects. The Anatomy of Resistance Campaigns (ARC) and the Geo-International Systems Data (Geo-ISD). Brief summaries.

Main theoretical contributions Main findings

2 Concepts

2.1 Statehood and historical legacies

2.1.1 Historical state entities and Pre-colonial states

2.1.2 Artificial states

2.2 Collective dissent and organized violence

2.2.1 Maximalist dissent

2.2.2 Civil Conflict

State based

Non-state

Communal violence

3 Theoretical/conceptual framework

Looking for the connection(s) between the two overarching concepts. What links has been found? What has not been done? What is this thesis adding to this literature?

4 Analytical approach

Data narrative (inductive/deductive). Empirical tradition.

Discussion of maps to uncover the state?

Discussion of “state presence”?

References

- Aspinall, E. (2009), Islam and Nation: Separatist Rebellion in Aceh, Indonesia, Studies in Asian Security, Stanford University Press, Stanford, Calif.
- Depetris-Chauvin, E. (2016), State History and Contemporary Conflict: Evidence from Sub-Saharan Africa, Documentos de Trabajo 475, Instituto de Economía. Pontificia Universidad Católica de Chile.
- Englebert, P., Tarango, S. & Carter, M. (2002), ‘Dismemberment and suffocation: A contribution to the debate on African boundaries’, Comparative Political Studies 35(10), 1093–1118.
- Nzongola-Ntalaja, G. (2002), The Congo from Leopold to Kabila : a people’s history, Zed Books, London.
- Paine, J. (2019), ‘Ethnic Violence in Africa: Destructive Legacies of Pre-Colonial States’, International Organization 73(3), 645–683.
- Pettersson, T. & Eck, K. (2018), ‘Organized violence, 1989–2017’, Journal of Peace Research 55(4), 535–547.
- Shehim, K. (1985), ‘Ethiopia, Revolution, and the Question of Nationalities: The Case of the Afar’, The Journal of Modern African Studies 23(2), 331–348.
- Sundberg, R. & Melander, E. (2013), ‘Introducing the UCDP georeferenced event dataset’, 50(4), 523–532.
URL: <https://doi.org/10.1177%2F0022343313484347>
- Wig, T. (2016), ‘Peace from the past: Pre-colonial political institutions and civil wars in Africa’, Journal of Peace Research 53(4), 509–524.
- Wig, T. & Kromrey, D. (2018), ‘Which groups fight? Customary institutions and communal conflicts in Africa’, Journal of Peace Research 55(4), 415–429.